The number of refugees worldwide is the largest in history and yet in 2019, the United States government is prepared to offer safety to tragically few people.

In 2018, HIAS expanded its advocacy efforts to provide deeper support and training to community leaders in several key states, including New Jersey. Those efforts led to the creation of the NJ Refugee Advocacy Coalition, which meets monthly to coordinate advocacy efforts and receives trainings and resources that strengthen the capacity to be effective local champions for refugees.

We warmly invite you to join HIAS this winter in New Jersey for our third advocacy training in the state.

WHAT IS THIS TRAINING?

The training will cover the basics on how to advocate for refugees in 2019. Over the course of the training, participants will receive an up-to-the-minute briefing on what issues are at play for refugees, and will build a group strategy for local activism based in the most effective advocacy messaging and tools.

Training content includes: building relationships with decision makers (including Members of Congress); communicating effectively about refugees; answering tough questions about the refugee program; and using media and social media as effective advocacy tools.

WHY NOW?

This is a critical moment to advocate for refugees. In a time of global crisis, the United States should be showing leadership by welcoming victims of violence and persecution. Instead, our government is slamming the doors on tens of thousands of people through a steady stream of policies designed to limit the number of refugee arrivals and which ultimately, over time, will dismantle the refugee program itself. Only a fraction of the number of refugees have been admitted this year in comparison to last year at the same time.

As a community, we must not - cannot - stand idly by while our government denies safety to refugees. Strategic advocacy from local communities has the potential to play a powerful role in influencing decision makers at all levels.

WHY HAVE I BEEN INVITED?

HIAS is convening a group of community leaders to form a local working group for refugee advocacy. As the Jewish refugee agency, we have focused our recruitment on leaders from the Jewish community, local refugee advocates, and refugee leaders. We are inspired and energized by the significant on the ground organizing, volunteering and deep communal learning about refugees in New Jersey, and seek to complement and enrich those efforts.

We are hopeful that the participants in this session will continue to take action together for refugees through engagement with both the NJ Refugee Advocacy Coalition and HIAS in order to address the short-term and long-term challenges facing the U.S. refugee program and refugees around the world.
